

THE GRIM READER™

a publication of Funeral Consumers Alliance protecting a consumer's right to choose a meaningful, dignified, and affordable funeral
Volume 7, no. 1

Back to basics—your rights when buying a funeral

This article is taken from our series of consumer education articles. Each one explains a funeral-related topic in clear and straightforward language. From how to shop for a cremation, ways to organize a memorial service, to what you can expect when buying cemetery property, we have something useful for every household no matter what your funeral, burial, or cremation choices. Check them out and share them with your family and friends!

Go to: funerals.org, then click on “consumers”

~Special thanks to Marcy Klein, who prepared this article.~

Planning

Appointment of agent: If you are concerned that your next-of-kin might not follow your wishes about the disposition of your body, you can designate another person as your agent to carry out your wishes. Most states allow you to appoint an agent to make funeral decisions. For a list of state laws and forms where available, visit funerals.org, then click on “consumer.”

Price lists

To plan arrangements within your budget and find an affordable funeral provider, you can request a price list in advance from one or more funeral homes. The funeral director is required by law to give you a General Price List if you come and ask in person, or give you prices over the phone. He or she cannot require you to disclose any personal information before giving out prices. Some funeral providers may be willing to mail or email their price lists, others may post them online, but they are not required to do so.

Making arrangements

Do-it-yourself: In the majority of states, a family, community or religious group can handle a

York. Write to fca@funerals.org for advice in those states.

Using a funeral home: The Federal Trade Commission's Funeral Rule guarantees your right to buy only the funeral services and goods that you death without a funeral director. You can do everything on your own or hire a home funeral consultant or death midwife to assist. You can prepare the body, acquire the necessary paperwork, hold a vigil or service, and transport the body to the burial site or crematory. Ten states, however, require you to hire a funeral director: Alabama, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Nebraska, New Jersey, and New want. You are not required to purchase a package with items you don't want or need, such as embalming, funeral service, hearse, etc. All items must be listed and priced separately on the funeral home's General Price List. A Basic Services fee will be included in all arrangements and cannot be declined. This fee covers funeral planning, getting necessary permits and the death certificate, preparing the death notice, holding the remains, coordinating arrangements with the cemetery, crematory or others, and overhead. It is already included in the prices shown for direct cremation and immediate burial—a simple cremation or burial without embalming, viewing or service.

Embalming

The funeral director must inform you that embalming is NOT required except in certain special cases. Some states require your explicit permission before embalming is done. In all cases, under the FTC Funeral Rule, funeral homes may not charge you for embalming if they did not obtain your permission first.

Direct cremation and immediate burial do not require any preservation whatsoever, and in other cases, refrigeration may be a viable alternative. Though it is never a legal requirement for viewing a body, most funeral homes will insist on embalming if an open casket viewing or funeral is planned. However, some will permit a private family viewing without embalming.

Embalming is mandated when a body crosses state lines from Alabama and Alaska. Five other states—California, Idaho, Kansas, Minnesota and New Jersey—require embalming when the body leaves those states by common carrier, such as airplane or train. However, this is rarely enforced and funeral homes in those states routinely ship unembalmed bodies (for Jewish clients, for example), so be sure to press if this is a concern for you.

Cremation

No law requires the use of a casket for cremation. Instead, you may specify a less expensive alternative container, a box of unfinished wood, pressed wood, fiberboard or cardboard. It can be one provided by the funeral home, bought elsewhere, or made at home, as long as it meets the size, rigidity and combustibility requirements of the crematory.

Urn: You cannot be required to purchase an urn from the funeral home. You may supply your own, or use the plain container in which the ashes are returned from the crematory.

Scattering: You may disperse the remains on your own property, or almost anywhere as long as you are discreet. Remains can also be scattered at sea. While federal regulations technically require cremated remains to be scattered at least three miles out from shore, the EPA does not enforce this regulation with private individuals.

Transporting: You can legally ship cremated remains, but only through the US Postal Service; the ashes must be placed in an inner container within a padded outer container. For plane travel, they must be in a non-metallic container to pass through the x-ray machines. It is best to keep the remains in the original box from the crematory, with the official documents still attached.

Burial

Casket: This can be one of the most expensive parts of a funeral. The funeral home must give you the complete listing of caskets, with descriptions and prices, before showing you any, and you can ask to see lower-priced ones not on display. You have the right to buy a casket from a third party; the funeral director is required by law to accept it, and not charge an illegal “handling fee.” In addition, you cannot be required to be present when the casket is delivered.

Vault: State and federal laws do not require the use of an outer burial container to enclose the casket. However most cemeteries will require one for a casket burial, and some will insist on a vault for an urn. The vault prevents the ground from subsiding and facilitates mowing with heavy equipment. You may specify a less expensive concrete grave liner instead of a vault. The funeral provider must give you a full listing of outer burial containers, with descriptions and prices, before showing you any.

Cemetery: Unlike funeral homes, cemeteries are not required by law to give you a printed price list before you buy, and no federal regulations give cemetery customers the right to buy only the services and merchandise they want. Only a few states require cemeteries to give you a copy of the rules pertaining to allowable markers, grave decorations, and visiting hours before the sale. In addition to the cost of the grave, the cemetery can charge an opening and closing fee at the time of burial, and a maintenance fee to cover upkeep of the grounds and graves.

Home burial: Most states permit burial on private property outside city limits, but each municipality has its own zoning restrictions and permit requirements. Unless you have established a family cemetery

THE GRIM READER

v. 7, no. 1

Published twice yearly by

Funeral Consumers Alliance
33 Patchen Road
South Burlington, Vermont, 05403
www.funerals.org
Joshua Slocum, editor

on your property, the land may be sold for other purposes, and the remains may not be easily accessible in the future. Home burial is prohibited in California, Indiana, and Washington.

Marker: The marker or headstone for a grave can be purchased from the cemetery, monument company, or even online, depending on the cemetery's restrictions. Because regulation is so lax, cemeteries frequently insist that the customer buy the headstone from them, or impose a ludicrous "inspection fee" for markers purchased elsewhere.

Veterans: All veterans are entitled to burial in a national cemetery at no charge; this includes the plot, opening and closing the grave, perpetual care, a headstone and flag. The family must pay for all funeral home expenses, such as casket, service, and transportation to the cemetery. The spouse and dependent children of an eligible veteran are entitled to burial and a marker in a national cemetery as well. State-run veterans cemeteries offer similar benefits, with some restrictions. See www.cem.va.gov for more information.

Payment

You have the right to receive a written, itemized statement after you make arrangements, but before you pay. It must show exactly what you are buying, the cost of each item, and total price. The statement must also spell out any legal, crematory or cemetery rules that require you to buy merchandise or services from the funeral home. The funeral home can demand full payment in advance.

Complaints

To report a violation of your rights or other unfair business practices, you can file a complaint with your state's Funeral Board, state Attorney General, or the Federal Trade Commission (consumer.ftc.gov or toll-free 1-877-382-4357). For more information, see "Filing a Complaint" on FCA's website, funerals.org. Please send FCA a courtesy copy of any complaint you file.

Pay it forward!

The Grim Reader and all of our publications are available free to anyone or any family who needs them. As a non-profit charity, we rely on your gifts to make this happen. Won't you help us help your friends, neighbors, and all Americans navigate the end of life with confidence? Thank you!

P.S.—When you're done with this issue, why not pass it along to a friend? You'll plant a seed that can begin a loving conversation about a tough topic.

—Please return this slip with your tax-deductible donation or donate at funerals.org/donate

—All gifts are tax-deductible. THANK YOU!

_____ (name)

_____ (mailing address)

Email: _____

Phone: _____

my check is enclosed

charge my Visa/Mastercard: _____ - _____ - _____

exp. date: ____/____/____

_____ signature

Summer2017GR

IN THIS ISSUE

Back to Basics

- Using a funeral home price list to control costs
- Is embalming necessary?
- Navigating cemetery rules

Funeral Consumers
ALLIANCE

Nonprofit Organization
US Postage Paid
Burlington, VT
Permit no. 478

A Federation of Nonprofit Funeral Information Societies
33 Patchen Road
South Burlington, VT 05403

Return Service Requested

Wondering how to start that “final” conversation?
We’ve got you covered. Each issue gives you clear, straightforward information to help you

- Substantially lower funeral costs
- Gain confidence and control over end-of-life affairs
- Lower family anxiety about “doing the right thing”

it’s all inside. . .

THE GRIM READER™